A Hero for Daisy

This is a documentary about Olympic rower Chris Ernst and the first women's crew at Yale. They had no lockers or bathroom facilities. After practice, they had to sit in the bus, sweaty and cold until the men were done with their showers. Some of them got sick. In protest, they marched to the athletic directors office, took off their sweats, and on their bared the bodies they had written "Title IX." They invited the NY Times to witness this event. This made national news and got almost immediate action from the University.
